The name Matthew Jenart began to circulate among parents in Teesside last October. Word had got round that the 28-year-old had been contacting schoolgirls as young as ten on Facebook and seeking to engage them in online chat.

Parents were determined to do something about the internet predator in their midst, but were unsure how to go about it.

That was until the 11-year-old daughter of a woman we shall call Sarah received a message from him. She told her mother, who resolved to discover exactly what he had in mind, and to stop him doing it.

So she set a trap. Posing as her daughter, she instigated a conversation with him on Facebook. Within minutes, she had got the result she was after.

Jenart, claiming to be 15, suggested he and the young girl should engage in some 'naughty fun'. Asked what he meant, he was explicit: 'Naked fun,' adding: 'It's only fun, try it you will like it.'

Sarah was sickened by the conversation but was satisfied that she had 'nailed' this man for seeking to sexually abuse innocent children. She felt confident that if she went to the police, Jenart would be jailed and the threat to schoolgirls around the area of Thornaby and beyond would be removed.

But she was wrong. Even though Jenart admitted attempting to incite a child under 13 to engage in sexual activity, Teesside Crown Court Recorder Robert Adams allowed him to walk free on Wednesday.

Sarah (who cannot be identified for legal reasons) is distraught at the outcome. 'I feel sick at heart,' she says. 'Any adult knows what "naughty fun" is. The meaning is totally clear.'

'But the worst thing of all is that, deep down in my heart, I am convinced that he'll do it again, and that he'll harm a child.'

For Sarah, the situation could not be worse. Not only is Jenart free, but she is anxious, afraid and constantly looking over her shoulder.

The story of Matthew Jenart, internet predator, is one that will resonate with every parent.

On the face of it, there is a simple and effective way to keep children safe from people like him: don't let them have Facebook or other online social media accounts.

But parents who refuse to let their children sign up with Facebook worry — with some justification — that their youngsters will feel left out and isolated from their peers. So it becomes easier to give in.

Sarah, 28, who lives with her long-term partner in a terrace house in Teesside, found herself in such a difficult position.

Facebook rules stipulate that children must be over 13 to have an account, but it's perfectly easy to get around the rules — just enter a different date of birth.

Her daughter first asked to go on the site when she was ten. Sarah refused, but relented towards the end of last year, after her daughter had started at secondary school.

'I can't say I was happy, but lots of her friends had accounts and I was worried about her feeling left out.

'Her father and I agreed that she could have an account so long as we were able to supervise it.

'We knew her password, and it was agreed that she would tell us whenever she received a "friend" request.

'We only have one computer, a PC, in the living room, so it was all very open. We also let her younger sister, who is a year younger, go on Facebook, under the same strict supervision.'

By this time, Sarah had heard about Matthew Jenart, who had sent 'friend' requests to five other girls. So when her daughter told her last December that Jenart wanted to be friends, she felt sick to the stomach.

'My sister had told me about this man who'd been messaging girls. Parents were worried about him, and what his intentions were.'

They were not being unduly hysterical. Two years earlier, in March 2010, 17-year-old Ashleigh Hall, from Darlington, Co Durham, had been murdered after going to meet a boy, whom she believed to be 16 and had met on Facebook.

Recorder Robert Adams called the behaviour 'bizarre' and 'disgusting' at Teeside Crown Court but told Jenart 'it is not clear precisely what you were attempting to incite her to do'

He turned out to be a 32-year-old oddball, Peter Chapman. Ashleigh was raped and suffocated by Chapman, and her body dumped at the side of a country road in Sedgefield, Co Durham.

Chapman was convicted of murder and is safely behind bars. But now another man, Jenart, was targeting girls and no one knew how harmless or dangerous he might be.

Jenart grew up in Lytham St Annes, Lancs, with his mother, Carol, and stepfather, Stephen.

At some point he had worked in a hotel, but he was then unemployed and living in Thornaby.

He had been in trouble before. In 2007, the Blackpool Gazette ran a small item saying that Jenart, then 23, had admitted breaching a court order by failing to carry out all his unpaid work for the community. He had been sentenced to an additional 20 hours' community service by Blackpool magistrates.

It was not clear what he had done in order to receive the penalty.

Lancashire Police say the offence or offences did not take place in its area. Greater Manchester police confirmed to the Mail they have records on Jenart relating to 'petty offences' committed in the Stockport area, but would not disclose the nature of those offences.

Whatever he had done in the past, Jenart was now targeting young schoolgirls online.

'I had tried to put a block on anyone by that name from contacting my daughter, but he still managed it,' Sarah says. 'Perhaps he changed his account details. I've no idea how he managed to find out my daughter's name to make an approach.'

Sarah discussed the matter with her partner. After telling her daughter not to respond to the request, she logged on to the computer.

There on her daughter's Facebook page, along with pictures of family and her school friends, was a rather sinister-looking picture of Jenart.

'It was obvious from his Facebook photograph that he was much older than 15,' says Sarah. I was sickened, but determined to outwit him.'

'How old are you?' she began. 'Why do you want to be friends with me? I'm only a kid.'

Jenart lied that he was 15. Sarah told him she was 11 and then told him she was alone in her bedroom. It was a clever tactic and it worked.

This is how the conversation went from there.

'Kool you want fun?' he wrote.

'Fun?' she replied.

'Naughty fun lol.'

'What do you mean?'

'I mean naked fun.'

'I'm only 11.'

'Lol it only fun try it you will like it xx What you upto tomz (tomorrow)?'

'Nothing much.'

'Kool so you going to have fun xx'

'No am too young and you're too old.'

Then Sarah logged off. 'I felt truly sick to my stomach as he sent his replies,' she said. 'My partner was watching the screen with me and was getting really angry. He just wanted to go out and give him a good kicking.'

'But I said we had to carry on and stay calm because that was the only way we were going to stop him.'

'But there came a point when I couldn't carry on any more. It knocked me for six. It disgusted me.'

The next day, Sarah contacted the police. She was interviewed at length and her daughter was briefly questioned.

Soon afterwards, Jenart, tracked down by his online profile, was arrested and then charged with causing or inciting a child under 13 to engage in sexual activity.

When officers accessed his account, they found he had contacted other young girls online.

'Our daughter was scared at first when we told her this bad man had contacted her. She felt quite nervous, but she was comforted when we told her the police had found him.'

'When it first happened, I deactivated her Facebook account, but she said that I was punishing her for something she hadn't done and that made me feel bad, so I let her go back on it. However, I monitor it every day.'

'It was stressful talking to the police, but they told us they thought they had a good case and we were confident we would get a result.'

After his arrest, Jenart claimed he would not have taken matters further with the girl and that it had been a 'joke'. But in court this week, he admitted attempting to incite a child to engage in sexual activity.

Sarah did not attend court because she did not want Jenart to see what she looked like, in case he would one day take his revenge.

Mr Recorder Adams called the behaviour 'bizarre' and 'disgusting', but told Jenart in puzzling contradiction to what he himself had admitted: 'In this case, it is not clear precisely what you were attempting to incite her to do.'

Instead of sentencing him to a jail term, he gave Jenart a three-year community order. Jenart was also put on the sex offenders' register for five years, ordered to undergo a treatment programme and will be banned from working with children.

'I was so shocked when I heard he'd escaped prison,' says Sarah. 'I had everything there in black and white, all the evidence the police needed.'

'What more do they need? Do they need a child to be molested or murdered?'

'Now other potential predators will look at Jenart's case and think: "It's all right, I can give it a go because nothing's going to happen."

'I feel very let down, and I do worry very much about Jenart will do next.'

My children aren't on Facebook. My 8-year-old daughter was on Binweevils (a safe site for young children to play) but a teenage boy (her best friend's bother) got into her account and used to it prey sexually on her and other young children. Binweevils were very good and shut down the chat as soon as their software caught some key suspicious words, but the police were not remotely interested. Since then the boy has been indecently assaulting others pupils at secondary school. If he escalates and eventually rapes/murders someone the authorities might take an interest and if he's convicted someone will get a promotion. Would it not be better to such things seriously from the start and nip them in the bud early?
